What do you think of when you hear the word Fruit Wine? My guess is that it doesn't hold quite the same mythical value as the word Bourgogne and Pinot Noir or Sauternes and Sauvignon Blanc. There is, as we all know, a marked difference in terms of the language value we confer to wines made from grapes as opposed to those wines made from other fruits. Grape based wines have rightly been given place in the pantheon of legend. The ancient terroirs, the mystic radiance of legendary sites and legendary wines and their development through the ages. The word fruit wine communicates the complete opposite. It hints at domesticity, simplicity and self-sufficiency but not likely the depth of legend or quality associated with grape wines ...

Honey wine, better known as mead, is a beverage which is regarded as rather a niche product. Here in Germany it is usually sold cheaply as there is a lack of recognition. Most recently, however, it has experienced a comeback. The market is growing rapidly, especially in the USA. A new mead cellar opens in Europe too every week. Men who have had access to honey have produced mead since ancient times. In those days an alcoholic drink was produced as a result of spontaneous fermentation, which became the drink and gift of the gods in mythology ...

Coca-Cola Peninsula Beverages (CCPB) consistently focuses on reducing its footprint in a region where climate protection is already a matter of survival. This South African bottler gets support through resource-saving technologies from KHS — made in Germany. Although there are apparently still some people who express doubts about climate change, large parts of Africa in particular have long been suffering from its very palpable effects: steadily decreasing rainfall and rising temperatures have been causing devastating droughts and extreme famines since 2015, especially in the southern part of the subcontinent ...
